

yet we still look to the modes of collectivising, if subjectivity can wage a greater war in this perhaps

(networked) every whisper is a crash on my ears

maybe we aren't grateful and don't want to be, maybe we want to be thoughtful, but not grateful, I don't know, if this disappears I won't be held responsible for what I just voiced for us

~

ETHIRA is a free App for iPhone and iPad

ETHIRA allows you to publicly post messages within 140 characters, with no usernames, accounts or archives.

The geotagging features allow you to limit your feed to just your location, or simply attach your location to an unlimited feed, or both.

~

This exhibition marks the launch of the new app, alongside video pieces and installation by Amalia Ulman, incorporating documentation of, and contributions for, ETHIRA.

Contributors all have varying poetry-artist practices, often utilising social media for instant expression and feedback. ETHIRA marks a new version of the expression-feedback exchange, reducing the personalisation of fast, text based expression, online.

Contributors: Bryan Morello, Bunny Rogers, Matt Luther, Guillermo Ruiz de Loizaga, Deanna Havas, Alex Vivian

~

With dewdrops dripping,
I wish somehow I could wash
this perishing world

~

ETHIRA®, designed by Amalia Ulman, was developed with the help of ARCADIA MISSA and Daniel Levitt.

Supported by the Arts Council of England
In association with the Post Media Lab

